

FREUD'S FREE CLINICS

PSYCHOANALYSIS & SOCIAL JUSTICE, 1918-1938

ELIZABETH ANN DANTO

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments ix

“The Conscience of Society”—Introduction 1

1 1918–1922: Society Awakes

“Treatment will be free”—1918 13

“The polyclinic will be opened in the winter and will grow into a Ψ institute”—1919 34

“The position of the polyclinic itself as the headquarters of the psychoanalytic movement”—1920 52

“An Ambulatorium should exist for psychic treatment in the widest sense of the word”—1921 81

“A Psychoanalytic Ambulatorium in Vienna”—1922 90

2 1923–1932: The Most Gratifying Years

“This help should be available to the great multitude”—1923 123

“The honor proceeds from the Social Democratic Party”—1924
135

“A warm sympathy for the fate of these unfortunates”—1925 153

“Although absent from the opening of the Clinic, I am all with you”—1926 167

- “Of special value in the promotion of [psychoanalysis is] the establishment of Institutes and Outpatient Treatment Clinics”— 1927 183
- Freud “knew exactly how things were in the world. But before he could go outside, he first had to know what was inside”—1928
197
- “The very group of patients who need our treatment are without resources”—1929 208
- “Free or low-cost analyses . . . [were] at least a small beginning”— 1930 221
- “As a social-democratic town councilor, Dr. Friedjung has furthered our interests as psychoanalysts”—1931 231
- “Male applicants for treatment [were] regularly more numerous than female”—1932 240

3 1933–1938: Termination

- “The Berlin Psychoanalytic . . . Policlinic . . . came to an end”— 1933 253
- “Psychoanalysis [as] the germ of the dialectical-materialist psychology of the future”—1934 265
- “A written Children’s Seminar of Marxist psychoanalysis”—1935
274
- “Social psychoanalysis”—1936 280
- “These were traumatic times and we talked little about them later”—
—1937 292
- “The fate of psychoanalysis depends on the fate of the world”—
1938 297

Notes 305

Bibliography 333

Index 343